

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

Aspen's New Northern California Facility is Fully Operational

Oakland, California, 01.25.10 – Aspen Logistics, Inc.'s newest facility and their base of operation out of Northern California is now fully operational. Aspen, who is leader in providing logistical solutions to the retail supply chain, leased the facility to better service their customers who are either manufacturing or distributing in the area. The facility opened in November and has been slowly increasing its operational capacity and services. The facility is located close to the Oakland Coliseum with easy access to the port and bay area cities. Aspen has been looking to increase its footprint in the area and is excited to capitalize on the new opportunity.

Aspen has operated throughout the western region since 1978, but has always anticipated that it would operate a strategic location in Northern California. The area is ripe with a large population and is home to many large manufacturers' logistics hubs. The company predicts that this start-up will give some of its customers an access point to new markets. It will also allow Aspen the opportunity to improve the service performances of prospective clients who have existing operations there. The economy being in the dregs have made it an opportune time to capitalize on the available real estate, and for Aspen to position itself in an area that only a few months ago may have been unattainable.

Aspen, who has national coverage through their extended networks, is capable of handling any number of logistics needs around the United States. The Northern California facility is expected to solidify their place as leader in the west. The company forecasts that 2010 will be another strong year with additional facilities to come.
